No more austerity - we won't pay for their crisis

Strike together - build a new mass workers' party

fter twelve years of Toryled governments lining the pockets of the richest and inflicting austerity on the majority, the Tories are reaching the end of the road. This Tory government is melting down in front of our eves.

already out of power. Jeremy Hunt has been brought in as chancellor in a desperate bid to try to convince the markets that this is a 'responsible' Tory government, by ripping up what remains of Truss' mini-budget.

The Governor of the Bank of England, Andrew Bailey, has welcomed Hunt's proposals as a 'meeting of minds'. But what does Hunt's 'responsible approach' consist of? Yes, reversing tax cuts which would have mainly benefited the rich and the big corporations, but also trying to implement savage austerity: further slashing public spending by around £40 billion. In addition, the energy price cap is now Truss is on her way out of office and is : set to end in April next year. Even with it, bills have doubled from a year ago, now they are set to rise further next spring.

This is a clear reminder that it was not the cruelty of Truss' blatant support for inequality which Tory grandees, the senior civil servants and the Bank of England objected to, but only her government's crass stupidity in discounting the dangers ahead. It was clear that her unfunded tax cuts would trigger the markets - which already sensed blood in the water given the parlous state of British capitalism - starting to increase the cost of government borrowing and selling sterling. It was also clear that her blatant pro-rich policies - after 14 years where payments to shareholders have increased three times faster than workers' wages - would trash what little support the Tory government still has in the population.

Ultimately, however, the Truss catastrophe is an indication of, rather than the cause of, the accelerating Tory party meltdown, which is in turn a result of the deep and growing crisis of ailing British capitalism. There is no way out of this nightmare for the Tory party. Let's end it for them - by coordinating the strikes and building a political alternative that fights for workers.

Social care: 'underfunded, under-resourced and under pressure' - unions must lead fightback

SOCIAL CARE TRADE UNION ORGANISFR

nderfunded, under-resourced and under pressure to deliver care to an ever increasing number of people, with an ageing and underpaid workforce, means the social care sector is heading for complete meltdown.

The number of vacant posts in adult social care is the highest on record while filled posts have dropped by 50,000 - the first ever drop in the number of social care workers. Vacancy rates are at 11% - twice the national average. Zero-hour contracts make up a huge 24% of all social care jobs, compared to 3% in the jobs market as a whole.

These are the headline findings in 'The state of the adult social care sector and workforce in England, published by Skills for Care. The comprehensive annual report highlights the parlous state of social care and the desperation felt by service users and providers alike.

The cost-of-living crisis means care workers are moving to better-paid jobs (almost all jobs are better paid!), compounding recruitment and retention difficulties.

Four out of every five jobs in the wider economy pay more than the median for care workers. This was £9.02 an hour in 2021/22. That year, the real-terms hourly rate fell by £9.50 an hour in April 2022 to keep them in line with the minimum wage. However, their real-terms pay has almost certainly fallen even further. Fuel price inflation for domiciliary care workers, who travel between clients using their own vehicles, has added to the pay cut.

The report reveals the public sector is now responsible for delivering less than one-sixth of social care in England. Local authorities account for 7%, as does the NHS. A further care workers saw their pay rise to 7% is accounted for by the estimated

The remaining 79% of posts in adult social care were for independent employers. Almost three quarters of these were in the private, for-profit 90,000 workers (in 120,000 posts): a slogan. The big three unions repre senting social care workers - United Unison and GMB - should combine to submit pay claims to every employer in the sector and use this as a launch pad for a mass organising and recruitment campaign.

The unions must also demand the nationalisation of the industry. That campaign needs to include standing trade union candidates in council and parliamentary elections on such

Capitalist crisis drives food prices higher

SOUTH EAST LONDON SOCIALIST PARTY

Nobody should go hungry. But in Britain, in 2022, well over two million people rely on foodbanks and food sharing apps like 'Olio' to feed themselves and their families. The current economic crisis is seeing the cost of food rise at its fastest rate since 2008.

The capitalist food system is in deep crisis, with climate change war and trade conflicts disrupting supplies. The price of food is rising by 12.1% a year, putting millions more on the bread line this autumn.

It isn't luxuries that are going up in price but basic items that we all rely on: oil, butter, bread, milk and pasta. Some prices are rising by as much as 50%. The rising cost of energy has had a knock-on effect on food and drink inflation. Food production, transport and storage costs are up. And, in Britain, where 40% of food and drink is imported, the falling value of the pound drives prices microwave because using the oven has become unaffordable, as if this is a normal state of affairs that we should all accept!

The global food industry is valued at $8 trillion dollars, with two of the world's top five employers beng Walmart and McDonalds, and third of the world's workforce is employed in agriculture. But from farmers through to food producers, and service, hospitality and retail workers, many of the people whose labour produces the food we eat are barely paid enough to survive on it

Socialists supports strikes for pay rises, and demand an immediate increase in the minimum wage to £15 an hour, as well as increases to benefits and pensions, so that people do not continue to go hungry.

We demand councils use their powers to make free school meals wailable to all children who need them, and to fund food banks, so that the nation's health is not reliant or people's good will.

The right to food should be fundamental. But the capitalist system we live squeezes wages and raises prices, all in the interest of profit.

Tory 'markets' meltdown - Build a mass workers' party to fight for a socialist alternative unt's attempts to implement new round of austerity are taking place against the background of the biggest fall in real wages since the 1950s, more than a decade of cuts to public services, and with the NHS in a state of collapse. Most importantly, they are taking place when there is a rising tide of strikes, as workers fight to defend their living conditions. If Tory MPs agree a new round of austerity in these conditions, it will lead to a gigantic social revolt. Sensing that, many may choose to save their own skins and not vote for measure: that would guarantee them losing their seats at the next election. And the markets - taking the measure of the scale of the Tories impotence may not be reassured by Hunt's ef forts to appease them.

At their recent conference, Tory MPs were muttering about how to avoid a 'Canadian scenario,' where their sister party went from leading a major ity government to having two MPs in the 1993 general election. Avoiding this now appears to be the most they can hope to achieve. Plots to force Truss out, and avoid letting the Tory party membership having a vote on her replacement, may succeed, but they will not put the Tory party together again.

The leadership of the trade union movement, the Trades Union Congress (TUC), is meeting in Brighton from 18-20 October. It is urgent that crisis and to force a general election to get the whole Tory government out as soon as possible. The government is in its death agony, but that will not prevent it from raining down attacks on the working class, including the threat of trying to implement new anti-union laws. Nor will it stop the employers doing the same - as shown by Royal Mail's threats of is vital therefore that the workers' movement steps up the struggle.

The need for an industrial fightback will not be removed when the Tories are finally forced out. Labour is now soaring in the opinion polls as a result of the widespread and over-conference, however, contained many of the same phrases as Hunt's over the last few days about being "responsible" and making "difficul choices, particularly when managing the country's finances". When Tesco boss, John Allen praised Labour as "the only team on the field", it was another indication that the majority of big business now believes Labour mass compulsory redundancies. It is would do a better job than the Tories now can in defending their interests. But the interests of the capitalist elite are diametrically opposed to those of the working-class majority.

Starmer and the Labour leader ship have ripped up Jeremy Corbyn's manifesto, including the pledges to a price cap on bills for just six months - a policy now adopted by Hunt! Sam Tarry, now deselected as parliamentary candidate for Ilford South, was sacked from the front bench for the 'crime' of saying workers need a pay rise. The Labour leadership is hell bent on reassuring 'the markets' that it would be 'responsible'. But what does that mean? 'The markets' are not some kind of independent arbiters of sensible financial policies; they are driven by the gambling of super-wealthy speculators and managers of financial institutions across boss praised the world, interested only in their 'The markets'

EDITORIAL

Sir Keir Starmer's 'New Labour' do ing the bidding of the 'markets' therefore means the trade union movement will need to be ready to organise a fight for workers' interests under a Labour government. That also raises the need to start building a political alternative that will fight for those interests. A start needs to be made at the next general election with trade union and socialist candidates standing against pro-capitalist Labour candidates.

We need to begin to build a mass workers' party that will stand up for the interests of the working class and fight for a programme to take the levers of power out of the hands of the unelected capitalist elites. It was New Labour 'mark one' that made the Bank of England 'independent removing any control of it by elected governments. That should be immediately reversed, along with the nationalisation of the banks and finance companies under democration workers' control and management. This, along with nationalisation of the major corporations, would lay the basis to begin to build a democratic socialist plan of production designed to meet the needs of the majority rather than providing unimaginable wealth for the few.

o understand the current situation in the dispute between the workforce and Mersey Docks & Harbour Container Services (MDHC), we need to look into the past

On 19 September, 68 engineers and 600 dock workers withdrew their labour for a fortnight of strike action. This was in response to dissatisfaction among the workers over the implementation of the union-agreed 2021 pay awards.

The 2021 award was the first increase in pay rates since 1995! It was negotiated to be implemented on 1 April 2022 in two distinct stages.

Firstly, the roles within the company had been divided into twelve categories, of which only four subsequently received rises, of between 0.6% and 4%. The remaining eight categories received zero increase. Unite members have refused to accept this.

Secondly, a negotiated rise in 2021 of 4.5%, with an additional 0.5% increase from July 2022, was reneged upon by the employers. They stated failure to meet targets' as the reason for not complying. This was despite the port running at 120% capacity for over two years, even through the Covid-19 pandemic

Furthermore, the grievances of the workforce have been exacerbated by the failure of the employer to restructure shift patterns, as previously agreed with Unite. Currently, the shift patterns are divided into two groups: permanent night shifts and rotation shifts.

The rotation shift pattern is currently two weeks of days followed by one week of nights. In order for the workers to enjoy a better worklife balance, a new structure of three weeks of days followed by one week of nights was negotiated in 2021. This has now been delayed unilaterally and without consultation, and won't be implemented until 2024.

The lowest-paid workers currently earn £25,000, with an average worker earning £31,000. This results in the lowest-paid worker taking home £371 per week after tax and National Insurance deductions. Hardly enough to fund a tabloid-concocted 'champagne lifestyle'! A fully qualified HGV driver on the docks earns £12.37 an hour, compared to local supermarket wages often reaching £13 an hour.

So that gives us a historical perspective as to where we are now.

On Tuesday 11 October, MDHC escalated their attack on workers' rights by issuing 'HR1' forms to all employees in the container section - putting 132 workers on 90-day redundancy notices, 109 are dockers. but technical and clerical staff, and two apprentices, are also affected. The Unite union does not accept the need for any redundancies, voluntary or compulsorily.

On 16 October, the National Shop Stewards Network (NSSN) held a precongress action summit in Brighton, of over 200 strikers, workers preparing for action, and others struggling against the cost-of-living crisis.

The conclusion was loud and clear - it is essential that strikes are coordinated to fight for inflation-proof pay rises and to kick out the Tories. The TUC's planned lobby of parliament on 2 November should become a massive mid-week 'Tories Out' demonstration. And if the crisis-ridden Tories dare to implement their threatened anti-trade union legislation, they should be met with a 24-hour

Socialist Party executive committee member Sarah Sachs-Eldridge reports.

SSN chair Rob Williams opened the summit saying that it could not be more urgent for the TUC to address the question: "How do we get rid of the Tories?"

The deepening Tory chaos, with Liz Truss now a "revolving door" of U-turns, reflects the crisis of the capitalist system. Billions in new austerity cuts could be on the cards, but also "ballots are piling in and piling up" in the new stage of the strike wave.

The trade union leaders should use the TUC to hammer out a platform of striking together, marching together, and changing the situation in the interests of the working class.

This includes on the political front as well. Rob said that, while Starmer can be the immediate beneficiary of the workers' movement forcing the Tories out of office, workers need a voice that is not embarrassed to support workers' action, pay rises and nationalisation. Rob said he hoped Keir Starmer would be asked directly at TUC congress why he doesn't intervene directly into the Royal Mail dispute, to say a Labour government will renationalise the postal service.

Iane Loftus. Communication Workers Union (CWU) vice president. described how the CWU strikes unite public and private sector workers providing a public service - and how the strikes are growing with cleaners and engineers joining the action.

Jared Wood, rail union RMT London Transport regional organiser, backed the NSSN's demands on the TUC, including drawing up plans to fight the anti-trade union laws. As Len said, health workers are "neither angels nor heroes, but workers who emand decent pay and conditions".

Usdaw member Scott Jones also touched on this, explaining why it was necessary for him to stand in the shop workers' union general secretary election. Usdaw organises some of the "key-est of key workers", who haven't vet been drawn into the strike wave. This was not due to a lack of willingness to strike, but due to the lack of leadership. The current general secretary, Paddy Lillis, has "presided over the loss of 50,000 members because they weren't supported". Scott described how Lillis has attacked Unite leader Sharon Graham for her criticisms of Keir Starmer, and explained that in standing he was fighting for a political lead as well as

Paul Kershaw from the Unite housing workers branch pointed out the "material difference" a Labour opposition that backed workers could make - for example, if it committed to banning evictions and building council homes. But Labour is not even "harmless". Paul gave the examples of Tower Hamlets Labour council being the first to use fireand-rehire, and Coventry Labour council attacking its bin workers. Therefore the question of a political voice for workers in struggle is "desperate and urgent now, given the potential for a general election to be called at any time. Paul proposed trade unionists ask Labour candidates if they support the demands of Enough is Enough, and if they don't, to stand themselves. Candidates that represent the labour movement can stand under the banner of the Trade Unionist and Socialist Coalition.

A CWU rep continued this theme saying: "If we get a Labour government in we get a watered down version of the Tories, and we don't need Tories mark two." He said that P&O showed what the bosses' agenda was more for less "The NSSN was never more important to bring workers together" - and to demand action not statements, from the TUC. Gary Clark, CWU branch secretary n Scotland, also demanded concrete action. He welcomed the NSSN's call for the TUC to coordinate the building of mass strike funds, and the announcement by his union of a strike fund. Gary called on Labour MPs not just to sign a letter to the Royal Mail boss - which only 45 of 197 have done but to donate a day's wages to the strike fund. He appealed to TUC delegates to do the same.

The many other contributions included Unite member Suzanne Muna, speaking about the Social Housing Action Campaign, with the demand for rents, service charges and evictions due to the cost-ofliving crisis to be frozen; Brian Debus about the campaign his Unison branch is fighting to defend libraries in Hackney; and Tom from 'Don't Pay. Kye Gbangbola from 'Truth About Zane' made an appeal for trade union support for his family's campaign for justice for his son.

October 2022 marks the thirtieth anniversary of the launch of Youth against Racism in Europe, 'the YRE', which played a leading role in the battles against the far-right British National Party (BNP) in the 1990s.

Socialist Party member Lois Austin (left), who was national chair of the YRE, spoke to the Socialist about why the YRE was formed and the approach it took to fighting racism and fascism.

he YRE was formed because, in a situation of economic unemployment and poor living conditions, there had been an increase in racist, and outright fascist, activity in Europe. There had been terrible attacks in Europe, for example on a hostel in Rostock, Germany, that housed migrants from Turkey.

In Britain's deprived inner-city areas, after more than a decade of Tory cuts and privatisation, there was an increase in activity by the far-right British National Party (BNP) and a series of racist attacks. The BNP set up 'Combat 18,' a street-fighting group of thugs, to organise attacks on left-wing

It was Militant supporters (as the Socialist Party was then known) in different European countries who initiated the setting up of a pan-European anti-racist movement. There were lots of young people protesting, taking part in demonstrations, so it was an obvious thing to do to try to link them up.

There was a demonstration in Paris around the 'sans papiers' (migrants with no papers) and we took young people from Britain to that - a precursor to the setting up of the YRE.

European demo

The first major mobilisation of the YRE was a big demonstration in Brussels against the rise of the far-right Vlaams Blok. Our sister party in Belgium was campaigning against the Vlaams Blok lived near the BNP HQ. They were and had mobilised big numbers of youth. We had a huge demonstration with young people from across Europe: 60,000 marched. That was the YRE's founding demonstration.

The build up to launching the YRE in Britain was the activity of the far right around the BNP headquarters in Welling, south east London. The BNP YRE. moved into Welling in 1987. At the time, the Labour Party Young Socialists (LPYS) was a sizable campaigning organisation, and the Bexleyheath LPYS, which is what I was a member of, responded to the BNP moving in. We set up the 'Bexley and Greenwich Labour Movement Campaign against Racism and Fascism'. And we set out turn up. It was a joint demonstration to get the HO closed down. We pointed out it was not a bookshop - which the BNP were claiming - it was a headquarters, and its presence would encourage racism and the growth of

The Tory council, the right-wing Labour Party, and the local press all tried to say that we - the left - were as bad as the right! And lots of people said: 'Why are you giving them publicity, you're giving them oxygen?'. We said: 'They won't just go away, they'll get bigger and stronger and we need to push them back'. Ignoring them wasn't an option for the local Black and Asian community. They needed to be confronted, isolated, and driven

We organised protests and demonstrations. There were four racist murders in the area. Rohit Duggal, who was a young Asian man; Rolan Adams, from Thamesmead, who was brutally killed by a racist gang; Orville Blair: and then Stephen Lawrence.

We were out demonstrating in response to every racist murder and attack. We held demonstrations in Welling and Eltham, where the racists outnumbered us, skinheads giving fascist salutes. That's what we were up against - the presence of the HQ was giving racists and fascists confidence.

We linked up with the Greenwich Commission for Racial Equality and the Greenwich Action Committee Against Racist Attacks. And we took the campaign to oppose the BNP to all the local trade unions, which affiliated to the campaign.

We held all-night vigils round the homes of local Asian families who frightened by racist graffiti and bricks thrown through their windows. We organised public meetings, including one in Welling library, which the far right attacked. We were there right at the start.

These were the early steps which laid the basis for the launch of the

It was after Stephen Lawrence was murdered that the tables really turned on the BNP. It was such a terrible attack, there was a mass response, an outpouring from the local community. He was murdered in April 1993. The VRE called a demonstration on 8 May, and we had 8,000 young people with the Black socialist campaign organisation, Panther.

The Anti-Nazi League (ANL), led by the Socialist Workers Party (SWP), organised a demonstration a week later, with the local Tory mayor on

We'd lobbied and petitioned to get the council to use its powers to close down the HO and they'd done nothing but denigrate our campaign. So we said they were partly responsible: out. None of the authorities acted. So for what had happened. Instead, we : then we organised a second big demmobilised the local community, Black

And that is what made us different from the ANL, that is why the YRE was: necessary. First of all, we weren't linking up with Tories. We were prepared to work with the ANL and anyone who genuinely wanted to fight racism and fascism, but our campaign was necessary because we weren't prepared to link up with Tories who were partly responsible through their inaction for allowing the BNP to fester.

Tory mayor on our platforms because they had done nothing about the BNP.

And, of course, the Tories were responsible for creating the economic conditions that allowed the far right to grow, conditions of high youth unemployment and rising housing costs. So we launched a campaign that said: 'don't let the racists and fascists divide us. YRE was a mass democratic youth campaign which attempted to combat racism with an appeal to working-class young people to fight for jobs and homes for all, and to oppose racism.

important role in defending the demonstration from the police brutality it faced. We had to negotiate, myself and other Militant members, to get a road opened up so that people could get out to safety, out of the trap that the police had created. But because there was so much anger and pressure on the establishment after the demo, they did have to act. The BNP was becoming a big nuisance for them and they wanted them out. But they didn't want to publicly say 'we've given in to these protesters' - which is actually what happened - so they set up a judge-led planning enquiry. The evidence the YRE gave to that planning inquiry was the crucial evidence that got the HO closed down. We had to link our arguments to planning issues. We said having a fascist HQ in the community was linked to the Race Relations Act and was causing detriment to the community. So, in the end, the state acted to shut them down, because on the ground we had isolated them and driven them out.

The other big events were in Tower Hamlets, in east London. Tower Hamlets was a borough with the worst male unemployment and greatest overcrowding in London. At the time, the population of the borough was majority white, with the Asian population concentrated in particular areas. Disillusionment in the right-wing Labour council meant that the Liberals had taken control, and ran poisonous and divisive campaigns (for example, on the Isle of Dogs, 'Island Homes for Island People'). The BNP were temporarily able to exploit that While the campaign was going on in Welling, in Tower Hamlets in August and September 1993 we were challenging the spot where the BNP 'sold' their paper every Sunday morning for weeks - really provocatively, in the heart of a Bangladeshi area on Brick Lane. This was not a paper sale. but an act of intimidation. We were building a campaign with the local youth and trade unions, and march ing to their spot to challenge them. On 19 September, the local Asian community and the YRE had built up enough support so that when the BNI turned up their spot was occupied and they couldn't carry out their sale.

Meanwhile, the Isle of Dogs 'Action Group for Equality' launched a petition to end all immigration. A young Asian teenager, Quddus Ali, was at tacked and put in a coma. The BNP won a councillor, Derek Beackon, on the Isle of Dogs, in a by-election in September 1993.

BNP politicians

The day after his election, council staff walked out of the neighbourhood centre in response. We campaigned in the local community, where we already had links because of the antipoll tax campaign, to try to cut across divisions. We helped to build up a campaign to save local services and for a 'People's Budget' for community services. We mobilised against Beackon; for example at his first council meeting people occupied the council chamber.

Asian youth, supported by the YRE, called a demo in the borough in October under the banner Youth Connection In March 1994, the VRE organised a Tower Hamlets school students' strike against racist attacks. Then the Trades Union Congress (TUC) led a demo of 40,000 through the borough. Beackon lost his seat in the full elections in May 1994.

Part of the campaign against the far right was helping to organise community defence. We helped local people organise a whistle-alarm system, where if fascists came on to an estate and people felt under threat, people would blow their whistles and lots of people would come out to confront them, to move them out of forward a political alternative with a : Stephen Lawrence's killers, they were working-class programme to answer: actually spying on the Lawrence famthe concerns of all sides of the community: no to local authority cuts, investment in jobs, build council houses, a future for young people.

We did a YRE school pack as well, to get into schools with our analysis. and to answer racist lies. In that pack we also talked about the history of the labour movement and the working class in fighting fascism, the need for working-class unity and the role of the trade unions. That had never really been done before

We also launched Show Racism the Red Card in football. That came out of the school pack. And we had another big march and gig in Brussels, as well : fascism. as an album, 'By Any Means Necessary. We also ran an anti-fascist youth camp in 1994.

Capitalist state

We were doing all this work and were arguing that we couldn't rely on the state and the establishment to get rid of the far right. That has been proven by the Spycops inquiry. While they should have been looking for

ilv. and on the YRE. Rolan Adams family was spied on too, and they are now core participants in the Spycops inquiry.

After one of the demos we or ganised in Becontree, east London, against a far-right 'Blood and Honour' gig, the police imprisoned us and put us on a tube train. They took us to Earls Court and, when we came out of the station, we were brutally attacked by riot police. Their priorities were to criminalise protestors and frighten people from protesting using their brutal tactics, rather than doing something about racism and

The BNP were beaten back in the 1990s, but the ongoing crises of capitalism, which the bosses always attempt to make the working class pay for, means that the possibility for the far-right to grow can reemerge. The consolidation of the Labour Party as a pro-capitalist party under Tony Blair, which betrayed working-class people with cuts and privatisation, allowed the BNP to win councillors and even a London Assembly member in the 2000s.

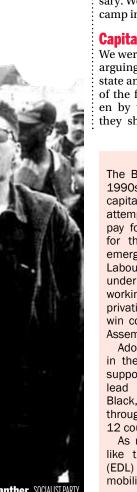

Adopting the same methods as in the 1990s, the Socialist Party supported Youth Fight for Jobs to lead a demonstration of young Black. Asian and white people through Barking where the BNP had 12 councillors.

As racist and hooligan groupings like the English Defence League (EDL) and the Football Lads Alliance mobilised street demonstrations and organisations.

· during the 2010s, hoping to grow in fertile territory under the blows of austerity. Again the Socialist Party responded with a class approach. We worked among young people and working-class communities, and in trade unions, to mobilise against these organisations.

Despite being attacked for doing so by the SWP, for example in the campaign to prevent the EDL from marching in Walthamstow, we linked fighting racism to fighting the cuts, putting forward demands that can unite all sections of the working class to fight the bosses and the super-rich, and so pull the rug from under far-right groupings.

The strike wave now taking place. and the campaign for a new workers' party with a socialist programme. hold the potential to again undercut support for racist and divisive ideas ridden system based on the exploitation of the majority of the world's population by a small, superrich elite who own most of the wealth and the means of producing it. This way of organising society, in which the pursuit of profit comes before everything else, causes poverty, inequality environmental destruction, wars and oppression across the globe.

The Socialist Party organises workingclass people to fight against the attacks from this rotten system on our lives and livelihoods, and for a socialist alternative: a society which takes the wealth out of the hands of the super-rich and is democratically run by workingclass people to meet the needs of all not the profits of a few.

Building fighting democratic trade unions in the workplaces and a new mass workers' party is a vital part of the struggle to change society along socialist lines.

Because capitalism is a world system. the struggle for socialism must also be international. The Socialist Party is part of the Committee for a Workers' International which organises across the world. Our demands include:

WORK, PENSIONS AND BENEFITS

- A £15-an-hour minimum wage for all, without exemptions. For the minimum wage to automatically increase linked to average earnings or inflation, whichever is higher.
- Share out the work. A maximum. 32-hour working week with no loss of pay or worsening of conditions. The right to flexible working, under the control of workers not employers. An end to insecure working, for the right to full-time work for all who want it; ban zero-hour contracts.
- All workers to have trade union rates of pay, employment protection, and sickness, parental and holiday rights from day one of employment. End bosses using bogus 'self-employment' as a means to avoid giving workers rights.
- No to austerity through inflation. For all wage rates to be automatically increased at least in line with price rises.
- Open the books of all companies cutting jobs or claiming they can't afford to pay a real living wage. State subsidies, where genuinely needed, for socially-useful small businesses.
- For trade unions independent of the capitalist state, with members having democratic control over their own policies, constitutions and democratic procedures. For all trade union officials to be regularly elected, subject to recall by their members and paid a worker's wage.
- Reduce the state retirement and pension age to 55. For decent living pensions.
- Replace universal credit and the punitive benefit system with living benefits for all who need them.

PUBLIC SERVICES

 A massive expansion of public services including the NHS and council services. Reverse all the cuts, kick out the privateers. Bring private social care and childcare facilities into public in order to provide free, high-quality services for all who need them. Expand services for all women suffering violence.

- For local councillors who are committed to opposing austerity and all cuts to local services, jobs, pay and conditions.
- For a socialist NHS to provide for everyone's health needs, including dental and eve care - free at the point of use and under democratic control. Kick out the private companies! Nationalise the pharmaceutical industry under democratic workers' control and management.
- Renationalise privatised utilities including rail, mail, water, telecoms and power - under democratic workers control and management.
- Free, publicly funded and democratically run, good-quality education, available to all at any age. Abolish university tuition fees and write off student debt, end marketisation and introduce a living grant. No to academisation. For all schools to be under the genuine democratic control of local education authorities, school staff, parents and student organisations.
- The right to a safe secure home for all. For the mass building of genuinely affordable, high-quality, carbon-neutral council housing. For rent controls that cap the level of rent. Fair rent decisions should be made by elected bodies of tenants, housing workers and representatives of trade unions. For cheap low-interest mortgages for home buyers. Nationalise the privately owned large building companies, land banks and estates.

ENVIRONMENT

- Prioritising major research and investment into replacing fossil fuels and nuclear power with renewable energy, and ending the problems of early obsolescence - where products are designed to 'wear out' and be replaced - and unrecycled waste.
- Nationalisation of the energy companies, under democratic workers control and management, with compensation paid only on the basis of proven need, in order to carry out a major switch to clean, green energy, without any loss of jobs, pay or conditions
- A democratically planned, massively expanded, free to use, publicly owned transport system, as part of an overall plan against environmental pollution.
- For a major, publicly funded, insulation and energy transition plan for existing housing stock.
- Agribusiness to be taken into democratic public ownership. For a food processing and retail industry under workers' control to ensure that standards are set by consumers, small farmers, and all workers involved in the production, processing, distribution and retail of food.

DEMOCRATIC RIGHTS

- For united working-class struggle to end discrimination on the grounds of race. gender, disability, sexuality, age, and all other forms of prejudice and oppression.
- Repeal the anti-trade union laws and all others that trample over civil liberties. For the right to protest and to strike! End police harassment. For the police to be accountable to local committees, made up of democratically elected representatives of trade unions, local community organisations and local authorities.
- For the right to choose when and whether to have children - for the right to access abortion, contraception and fertility treatment for all who need it.
- For the right to asylum with democratic community control and oversight of emergency funding resources. No to racist immigration laws.
- Expand democracy. For the abolition of the monarchy and the House of Lords. For all MPs to be subject to the right of recall by their constituents at any time, and to only receive a worker's wage. For proportional representation and the right to vote at 16.
- For the right of nations to selfdetermination. For an independent socialist Scotland and for a socialist Wales, both part of a voluntary socialist confederation of Wales, England, Scotland and Ireland.
- Oppose the dictatorship of the billionaire owners of the media. For the nationalisation of newspaper printing facilities, radio, TV and social media platforms. Access to these facilities should be under democratic control, with political parties' coverage being allocated in proportion to the popular vote at elections.
- For a new mass workers' party, based on the trade unions, and drawing together workers, young people and activists from workplaces, and community, environmental, anti-racist and anti-cuts campaigns, to provide a fighting, socialist political alternative to the pro-big business parties.

SOCIALISM AND INTERNATIONALISM

- No to imperialist wars and occupations!
- Take the wealth off the super-rich! For a socialist government to take into public ownership the top 150 companies and the banking system that dominate the British economy, and run them under democratic working-class control and management. Compensation to be paid only on the basis of proven need, not to the fat cats.
- A democratic socialist plan of production based on the interests of the overwhelming majority of people, and in a way that safeguards the environment.
- No the EU bosses' club. Organise a campaign with European socialists and workers' organisations to use the talks on post-Brexit relations to tear up the EU pro-capitalist rules. For a real collaboration of the peoples of Europe on a socialist basis as a step towards a socialist world.

Usdaw staff strike over pay and working arrangements

A SOCIALIST PARTY MEMBER IN USDAW

Around 100 Usdaw ancillary and clerical staff, members of the GMB, took a first day of strike action on 30 September in a dispute over pay and hybrid working. As well as picketing Usdaw's new head office on Salford Quay, pickets were also present outside the union's offices in Cardiff and Glasgow.

Usdaw's leadership is refusing to even discuss a plan for hybrid working as part of resolving the dispute, while saying that the £1.3 million they have unilaterally added to the pension fund brings their 3.5% pay offer to 11%

Would Usdaw members accept this behaviour from one of our employers?

Most Usdaw members were on the front line during the pandemic, working in factories, distribution and retail. But there are members who work in administrative roles, for example, who could work from home. But Usdaw negotiators, arguing for : twitter our members to be entitled to work from home, will be hamstrung if companies can point to the union refusing our own staff the right to do that!

Likewise, we would be livid if an employer justified a below-inflation pay offer, by unilaterally investing money that could fund other benefits, without negotiating with us.

To make matters worse, in order for other sections of Usdaw staff to not have to cross picket lines outside offices, the union leadership announced at short notice that those not on strike would work from home!

Instead of forcing Usdaw staff to strike to get their voices listened to, Usdaw's leadership should agree to negotiations right away. In fact, the union should work with members to draw up a charter for home/hybrid working, and campaign on it, as well as making sure that arrangements for Usdaw staff at least meet those levels.

 Further strike action takes place on 27 and 28 October. The strikers $can\ be\ followed\ at\ @GMBX39\ on$

For the first time in 15 years, there is a left challenge to the right-wing leadership of Usdaw. Socialist Party member Scott Jones is seeking nominations to stand for general secretary. He is standing as a fighting candidate, for a member-led union, s we approached the GMB strikers, even before we could see them we could hear boos and shouts of "scab!", as strikebreaking Stagecoach bosses drove buses past

In response to bosses, who complained at the use of the word 'scab', Gary Smith, GMB general secretary, who had visited the picket earlier, emphatically responded: "People who cross picket lines are scabbing!"

97% of Stagecoach drivers voted for strike action, on an 83% turnout, after being offered a derisory, belowinflation pay offer.

GMB organiser, Stuart Gilhespy, told the Socialist that, despite Stagecoach saying they would leave no stone unturned in order to settle the dispute, bosses have refused to sit down with the GMB and negotiate.

The atmosphere on the picket line was buoyant, despite some of them being there from 3.30am. The strikers told us that at 8am there were around 200 of them packed into the local pub to discuss their tactics. The meeting ended with them all stamping their feet; the mood was electric. One striker said he'd worked in this iob for 45 years and had never known such militancy.

A common comment, starting with the first words from the very first striker we approached, was: "We need a general strike!"

Corinne: "They need accountability. They're ignoring us, and making our children feel less valued. It makes you feel helpless and a failure. It's heartbreaking."

Nicola: "Their own policies say that every child should get an education, and that every child should be developed to their ability. They are failing on those counts."

Corrine: "What's behind it is funding. They say Leicestershire is underfunded compared to elsewhere, but everywhere is underfunded! We don't have enough case workers, because it's so overworked. There's so much burn-"That school have already said : out, and the wages aren't enough."

Martin Powell-Davies - National Education Union (NEU) and Socialist Party member - quoted from an RMT picket that "Labour are the least worse option in the next election, but we deserve better than the least worst".

Emma Campbell, a University and College Union (UCU) branch secretary, whose members are striking over pay, said that even some the few who had voted against action were now out on strike.

Emma said wages had stagnated and staff were relying on food banks. The massive staff turnover meant that the college couldn't get specialist teachers, as lots were returning to industry. Now both the NEU and NASUWT unions are balloting for strike action as "all education has had enough".

William Jarrett, from North Tyneside, outlined TUSC's activity in the area, including a 15% vote in one ward in last year's council elections. At the end of the meeting, three new candidates came forward to stand in the local elections.

Trevor Howard, a lay tutor for transport union RMT, said the Conservative government had been blocking rail companies coming to a deal to resolve the strike. Trevor said the phenomenal sums of money being taken out of the rail network by private operators makes the case for public ownership.

Yasar explained how taxi drivers across West Yorkshire feel let down by Labour councils - many say they can't vote Labour. But Yasar explained that the Conservatives are no option either. LifeSkills college in Basildon has gone into administration after funding from the government's Education Skills Funding Agency was cut at very short notice. A demonstration of 50 staff, learners and their families took place on 14 October - the day of closure.

These colleges cater mainly for learners not well served by other providers, 14 staff and more than 150 learners, most who had just started courses, have been abandoned.

Student Kaydee said they have been told no other courses are available until next September. Dedicated staff are angry, frustrated that their learners have been let down, and obviously fearful for their jobs.

With colleges all over the country, 80 staff and over 500 learners are affected. Without alternative funding, there is no clear future for the college.

Southampton trans pride was clapped and cheered

Over 200 gathered for Southampton's first ever transgender pride. We marched through the city centre with flags and banners flying.

Despite online threats from antitrans activists to cause disruption, the mainly young participants were clapped and cheered by passers-by. Socialist Party leaflets were snapped up, and we ran out of pamphlets.

Many good discussions took place, underlining that trans rights are workers' rights, and the need to fight together - including getting involved in your trade union, so LGBTQ+ rights are defended at work too. Better access to health services is linked to the struggle for greater resources for the whole NHS, so we don't become divided by unfair priorities.

Everyone was worried about the cost of living, supported the strikers and wanted rid of the Tories. Many were interested in the Socialist Party, and promised to come to our next meeting on fighting for a socialist green energy policy.

Iran's revolutionary youth movement continues

Urgently prepare a general strike as the next step

LUKAS ZÖRFLFIN SOZIALISTISCHE ORGANISATION SOLIDARITÄT (CWI GERMANY) AND ROBERT RECHERT INTERNATIONAL SECRETARIAT CW

vents are moving rapidly in Despite massive repression with over 200 murdered and thousands of demonstrators and now strikers, being arrested increasingly revolutionary protests continue to grip Iran. These have lasted for more than four weeks and have now widened in scope, especially as strikes in support of the protests have begun. All this underlines the new quality of the movement that broke out after Iina Mahsa Amini's death at the hands of the so-called 'morality' police.

Initially the protests were led by young people, especially women and teenagers. The deputy commander of the so-called Islamic 'Revolutionary' Guards (in reality the counterrevolutionary guards) has said that the average age of those arrested is 15 years old. Now protest strikes have spread in the oil sector, a key resource as Iran has roughly 10% of the world's proven oil reserves.

Repeatedly, the streets have echoed to the call: "Death to the dictator". In response there has often been brutal repression and, in a few areas, exchanges of gunfire between security forces and protesters. But the military and security forces do not exist in isolation: revolutionary movements can affect them. While most have so far stood by the regime, significantly, one video has shown riot police in southern Tehran walking, without their helmets, alongside the demonstrators rather than attacking

Despite its Kurdish origin, "Jin, Jiyan, Azadi" (Woman, Life, Freedom) has become a main slogan of the movement as it spreads throughout the whole country. This illustrates how Iran's ethnic divisions can be overcome on the basis of common struggles. Significantly, the regime has met the protests in areas populated by ethnic or religious minorities, like the Kurds and Baloch, with greater repression. To prevent the regime using divide-and-rule tactics, the movement needs a concrete programme on the national question, which advocates equality and includes the right to self-determination of the oppressed nationalities, while calling for joint struggle against the

The explosive spread of the movement throughout Iran can be traced back to decades of fermenting anger over social injustices, regular repression of opposition, rigging of elec-tions by blocking candidates and, in particular, the regime's brutal oppression of women.

The regime has also been undermined by economic crisis. Partly under the impact of western sanctions, the economy is between 4% and 8% smaller than it was in 2010. At the same time it is ravaged by inflation.

Food prices are up 70% compared with a year ago, in the last 15 years real household consumption has fallen by 29% in cities and almost 50% in rural areas. The government itself estimates that a third of Iran's nearly 89 million population live in poverty. The economic crisis has particularly hit women, the number of women working has dropped by 20% in four years and the unemployment rate among women graduates is double that of men, when 60% of Iran's university students are women.

It is against this background that Iina Mahsa Amini's death sparked off : day before its third day of strike acthis mighty movement, which has so : tion during the ongoing movement. far been mainly carried forward by teenagers and young adults.

Currently there are regular street shows how deep the rejection of the regime is. Many will have seen some of the videos circulating of schoolgirls removing their hijabs at school and clashing with Basji and police spies loyal to the regime, who monitor religious rules in schools. The Coordinating Council of Iranian Teachers' Unions has called on students to turn classrooms into spaces for democratic discussion and to expel all forces loval to the regime from classrooms. This Coordinating Council statement was issued the

of the 'Revolutionary' Guards. This

The strikes in Kurdish areas, of teachers nationally and of sections of petrochemical workers are imporbattles with police and units of the itant. These can be the spark to wider volunteer Basii militia, who are part i action that could show the strength of the movement and the weakness of the regime's base. Some actions are developing through local initiatives. That is very positive but it is increasingly urgent for the protests to go to a higher level. The regime will not be brought down just by riots and demonstrations - which it hopes to sit out. A combination of a 24 or 48hour general strike with mass demonstrations would be an extremely mportant next step in giving a shape to the movement. The formation of local bodies of representatives of workplaces, communities and educational institutes to organise such a strike would be an important step towards organising the movement and beginning to establish an alternative power to the regime's structures. Since 2017-18, there has been a general rise in workers' struggles and the growth of semi-legal independent workers' organisations in some workplaces, Last May Day, a joint statement was issued by 15 Iranian working-class organisations which listed a series of demands and also called for the creation of "a coalition council among all the workers, teachers, employees, retirees, women, students, and the unemployed... This is not just a demand among others, but the urgent platform for aiming at a new organisation of work in our society". This statement ended with the declaration that "the emancipation of the workers is brought only by the workers' themselves!"

Now the militant Haft Tappeh sugarcane refinery workers have issued an appeal for a "nationwide strike". This call needs to be urgently taken up. Likewise the idea of a "coalition council" mentioned in the joint May Day statement needs to become a reality. This may require, as the next step, coordinated strikes from all semi-legal trade unions that can set an example and be rapidly further developed into a 24 or 48-hour general strike.

A campaign that prepares for a general strike is more necessary than ever. This needs to include a programme that links the immediate issues with the need for regime and system change. Immediate issues like the release of all detained protestors - trade union and worker activists, and political prisoners are starting points. So too the freedom of women to wear the clothing of their choice and to work where they want, and the abolishment of the 'morality' police the so-called 'Guidance Patrols'.

But these demands are just the beginning. The right to freely organise. in the workplace and politically, as well as the abolition of all oppressive structures, laws, and organisations (like the Basji), are essential. Economic demands such as the reduction of the working week and an inflation-proof minimum wage are immediately important.

The teachers' Coordinating Council call for classrooms to become spaces for discussion can also help stimulate the necessary debate or the question of what comes after the current regime, something that also needs to develop in workplaces and communities. Schools could become one of the venues in which such wider bodies could meet. Discussions in which the questions of how to secure democratic rights, what sort of society should be created, and whether Iran should remain capitalist or carry through a socialist break can be de bated. But alongside discussions on programme, these bodies can begin to coordinate the struggle, including organising the defence of protesters and strikers from attack.

Splits in the elite

Ex-president Kathami has called on the repressive organs to take the side of the protesters, and it appears that parts of the military have already referred positively to his statement.

Likewise, the now detained former prime minister Mir-Hossein Mousavi sent out a message urging the security forces to end the repression, saving: "Armed forces! The powers vested in you are for defence of the people, not their repression; for protection of the oppressed, not service to the powerful and mighty. The hope is that you will stand on the side of truth and the nation. Your duty is secure the peace for the millions and especially the downtrodden, and no to consolidate the power of oblivious officials."

These are examples of divisions widening within the elite. While significant, it also needs to be kept in mind that members of the so-called reformist wing of the regime, like Kathami and Mousavi, are essentially concerned with saving the Islamic . Republic's basis. To do so they may, for example, abolish the 'morality police and the strict clothing regulations for women, but otherwise leave much of the regime intact. Even if elements like this want to remove large parts of the Islamic Republic's structures, it is clear that they would want to build a more 'normal' capitalist state, something which would leave the economic and social demands of working people and youth unanswered.

But the more conservative elements in the ruling class have not given up, they try both to divide and crush the movement. The speaker of the parliament, a former 'Revolutionary' Guard commander, has urged protesters not to allow the demonstrations to become "destabilising" while promising to "amend the structures" of the country's morality police.

Faced with the growing strength of the protests. President Raisi tried to appease the movement. On 15 October, the official Irna news agency circulated a statement by Raisi saying that the regime would "review, revise, update" some of the laws in force in the country. He added that

'doubts" within society and that "we should also see if we have achieved the goals set and if not, where the The regime is undermined by its own divisions, and faces possible overthrow. But that immediately poses the question of what next? The current movement has a crossclass makeup, it encompasses different elements opposing the current rulers. However, once the regime is overthrown or even severely weakened, the question will be posed: who takes over the power? Inevitability in every revolution this question is posed. There can be powerful calls for unity, or at least unity against the forces of the old regime, which are made in arguments for the formation of a 'temporary' 'provisional', 'unity' government to secure' the revolution, organise elections etc. Certainly there can be unity of action against counter-revolution but that is very different from the question of workers' organisations collaborating with pro-capitalist forces in a government maintaining the capitalist system.

The workers' movement needs to set its own agenda, a socialist agenda which combines together the immediate demands with the need to break with capitalism, so that the working class can begin the socialist reconstruction of society. Today the revolution needs to seize the opportunity to do this and not limit itself to ending the decades-long repression by the counter-revolution that pushed the working masses aside and seized power after the mass revolt that ended the shah's dictatorial rule.

liberal capitalists opposing the current leadership or even the entire regime, will want a more 'normal' capitalist system without the constraints of the top religious leaders and apparatchiks of the Islamic state bureaucracies. But the continuation of capitalism means that the fundamental issues facing Iran will not be answered, meaning that inevitably class struggles will break out as interests of the capitalists and the working class come into conflict. If the capitalist power is not broken this would pose the danger of counter-revolution, probably not on the same lines as 1979-80, but possibly like in Egypt in 2013.

It is also necessary for the Iranian working class and youth to have no illusions in the role of western imperialism. Aware of the potential strength of the Iranian working class they have long attempted to cultivate links with Iranian opposition ists and workers' leaders with a view to drawing them into a pro-capital movement needs to stand for is the replacement of the present regime by a provisional government made up of representatives of the working class, youth and poor which imme diately takes action to implement the revolution's basic demands. At the same time, it needs to encourage the development of local democratic bodies which can become the foundation of a new regime. Such bodies could be the basis for the election of a revolutionary constituent assembly to decide the country's future. But to achieve this there needs to be a socialist force, a revolutionary party, which can argue for these ideas. This was the case in Russia in 1917 when Bolsheviks, led by Lenin, efused to join the pro-capitalist provisional government and instead campaigned to win majority support among the working class for socialist revolution. That is the example which needs to be followed.

The unfolding new Iranian revolution is a tremendous development; it is already starting to inspire youth and workers in other countries. If successful, it will have an electrifying effect in the Middle East and beyond. The energy and bravery of the young people are an example to all. What is needed now is the widening of the movement and a clarification of the concrete steps necessary to both defeat repression and to open the way to real liberation from oppression and all the ills of capitalism.

BUILD A MASS STUDENT MOVEMENT AGAINST THE COST-OF-LIVING

Solidarity with students in Ireland – let's walk out here too!

SOCIALIST STUDENTS

ocialist Students extends its solidarity to the tens of thousands of students across Ireland who protested against the student cost-of-living and housing crisis on 13

CRISIS

The large walkouts and rallies are a display of the huge anger that exists among students in Ireland, as sky-high fees and rents – compounded by an acute student accommodation shortage – have left many struggling to live.

Socialist Students supports the demands of the Union of Students in Ireland (USI), that has called for rent caps, the abolition of fees and a publicly funded higher education system, among other demands.

The same crisis looms over students in the UK. During the summer, one in three students were left with $\pounds 50$ a month to live on after paying rent and bills. 11% of students now use food banks, up from 5% at the start of the year. Like in Ireland, some UK students have been forced to defer their studies due to a lack of accommodation, while others have had no option but to live miles from campus.

The president of the USI said that the protests were "just the start". Socialist Students calls on the National Union of Students (NUS), as the confederation joining together millions of students in the UK, to follow the example of the USI and take the lead in organising walkouts in all universities and colleges across the country, as the first step in a mass fightback against the student cost-of-living crisis.

But if the NUS does not act, then Socialist Students will be calling for walkouts and demonstrations on every campus, as a step towards building democratic and open student organisations that can link up nationally to build a mass student movement – for living maintenance grants, rent controls, and fully publicly funded, free higher education.

By uniting with workers fighting back in the trade unions, students can force this weak and divided Tory government to concede to our demands. That's why Socialist Students will be marching alongside the trade union movement at the TUC lobby of parliament on 2 November. We call on all students looking to link up with the growing strike wave to join us.

Young people's experience of capitalism – poverty, crisis and austerity – has led many to search for a socialist alternative. Join Socialist Students to help build a movement against the student cost-of-living crisis, for free education, to campaign on campuses, and fight for socialism.

Socialist Students says:

- No to price rises on campuses, early closure of libraries or other campus spaces, or any more cuts to our education, courses or jobs. No delays in access to student hardship funds for students in need
- For third-party halls to be immediately taken into the ownership and control of the university, as a step towards introducing democratic rent controls for students. Councils should use their powers to compulsorily register landlords, to force action on dilapidated and overpriced student housing
- Replace student loans with living grants tied to the rate of inflation – cancel student debt, scrap fees, and make the super-rich pay
- Link up with striking workers build a movement to demand that the bosses are made to pay for the cost-of-living crisis
- Students and workers unite to kick out the Tories and fight for socialist change. For democratic public ownership of the banks, monopolies and major industry to provide us with a future
